

Yep, there he is.

Santa.

You probably already spotted him.
Because, let's be fair . . . he kinda jumps out.
With his beard and belly, and his sleigh and reindeer.
The whole kit and caboodle.
Or did you recognize him by the heap of presents?

Anyway . . .
That's how you know Santa, because that's how he sneakily slips into your house each December.
But you likely have no idea what he's up to the rest of the year.
It's impossible to spend every single day frolicking from rooftop to rooftop, climbing down chimneys and tossing around presents. Even for Santa.

So, do you want to meet the real Santa too?

Pine trees have to be decorated. That's the law.
Because a Christmas tree without decorations,
is like decorations without a Christmas tree.
Bald and boring and just . . . weird.
That's why people like to go completely crackers:
baubles and tree-toppers, garlands and lights, bows and stars . . .
bananas, car tires, rocking chairs, and dog houses . . .
You name it, someone puts it on their Christmas tree.
And rightfully so.

But why aren't we decorating other trees?
You know. Broadleaf trees. Beeches.
Apple trees and pear trees.
Trees-you-can-see-all-year-round-trees.
Common or garden, regular tree-like trees.
Well . . . Santa does exactly that.
He decorates everything in his garden.
